

Reflexive Verbs

In a reflexive verb the subject does something to him/her/itself. They start with

Je me ...	Nous nous ...	An important new word is se (oneself);
Tu te ...	Vous vous ...	always in the third person.
Il/Elle se ...	Ils/Elles se ...

Je m'endors. Je me réveille. Je me lève. Je me couche. Je me lave les mains (here the me is indirect & les mains are the direct object).

All reflexive verbs are transitive (they always take an object). Vice-versa, theoretically all transitive verbs could be reflexive (most things the subject can do to itself, it can do to others). Je le (him) réveille. Je me vois dans le miroir.

Others: je m'ennuie, je m'habille, je m'exprime, je me fâche, je me peigne, je me présente, je me repose.

Adverbs

Just as English adds -ly to most adverbs, French adds -ment (the t is never pronounced). To form them, take the feminine form of the adjective and add -ment: frais > fraîchement, cruel > cruellement. Exception: vraiment, not vraiemment (*). Some adjectives have no feminine form: facile > facilement.

Others: certainement, actuellement, complètement, doucement, habituellement, heureusement, lentement.

Just as in English today, often, well, etc.), some adverbs do not follow this rule (aujourd'hui, souvent, bien, etc.). Some add -é-: profondément.

The adjectives that end in -ant change to -amment: courant > couramment; -ent change to -emment: prudent > prudemment, élégant > élégamment. Two exceptions: lent > lentement, not lentemment () and présent > présentement, not présemment()).

() It's common practice to write or print () after a form that is incorrect.
